Relying on your own memory to keep a record of all your passwords might not always be a great idea. Considering that we use a multitude of accounts on a daily basis, it would be hard to be infallible. That is why a software solution such as LastPass could come in handy if you are in search of a reliable tool that can safely store all sensitive information for you. Intuitive Windows 10/8.1 app that creates a safe haven for sensitive data Before anything else, it must be mentioned that LastPass is a Store app designed specifically for Windows.1 computers, but you can use its capabilities cross-device, which proves its degree of flexibility is quite high. When you first get to interact with the program, you need to create an account as well as indicate a master password, which is actually the only thing you have to remember in order to automate the process of logging into your accounts. Can safely store and organize website accounts But let's take a more in-depth look at the program's abilities. What it can do is memorize your username and password for any site you want, with the possibility or organizing all this data in an intelligible way. Alongside the self-implied URL, username, and password, a name for said website, a folder, and annotations can be assigned to each entry. It is also important to mention that you can add accounts to favorites, enable AutoLogin, check or uncheck AutoFill, as well as require a password reprompt whenever trying to access your account. Provides you with form-filling features And since we have mentioned form filling options, you need to know that the program comes with an elaborate section dedicated precisely to that, letting you type in all sorts of information you may be asked to provide when dealing with sensitive transactions and whatnot. In order to ensure that these details are not freely available to intruders, you can once again ask the program to prompt you with a window asking for permission before using the data. Lets you hide and group all sorts of notes Last but not least, the app is also able to keep your notes in a safe environment. It is possible to save anything, from bank accounts, driver's licenses, health insurance numbers, to instant messenger-related details, software keys, and Wi-Fi passwords, and have no fear that they could be seen by prying eyes. It's reliable and easy to use. However the main thing is that it's a web based application that I use on my PC. I think when you live outside of the US or a country with completely different internet infrastructure they should have a version for that country. I have to go into my FTP account and download things and then install them. It would be nice if they could have an offline version. method.
